"it is very difficult for the infection-fighting blood cells to penetrate these infected areas, making them ideal places for the bacteria to hide from any attempts to eradicate them," explains cribb.